

AUTANA

This fashion collection highlights the contrast between traditional craftsmanship and contemporary influences that shape the fashion industry and the indigenous way of life, drawing from the rich cultural heritage of Venezuela's indigenous peoples. In addition to bringing attention to the urgent sociopolitical problems endangering the cultural existence of Venezuela's indigenous communities, the collection seeks to celebrate their beauty, customs, and bravery.

Venezuela is home to numerous indigenous communities, including the Yanomami, Pemon, Wayuu, and Warao, each with distinct traditions, beliefs, and styles. Since these communities have always had a strong bond with the land, natural materials like cotton, feathers, beads, and other locally obtained items are frequently used in their traditional clothing. The textiles and craftsmanship used in their garments signify not only aesthetic preferences, but also a deep connection to their environment, spirituality, and ancestral knowledge.

This collection aims to raise awareness of the socio-political issues surrounding illicit mining and to celebrate the beauty of indigenous cultures. It highlights the resilience of these communities and emphasizes the need to protect their culture, environment, and rights through a blend of contemporary fashion and traditional aesthetics. Additionally, it seeks to promote sustainable mining practices and the protection of indigenous

DESCRIPTION

This off-shoulder gown features dramatic gathered draping that cascades from the bodice, creating a voluminous yet controlled silhouette. The structured beige corset cinches the waist, offering a contrast to the fluid movement of the chiffon fabric.
